This invention relates to a process for the production of carboxylic acid esters. In particular, it relates to the production of alkyl esters of carboxylic acid esters from alcohols and carboxylic acid esters. The production of carboxylic acid esters by the reaction of an alkyl halide with a carboxylic acid ester in the presence of a catalyst is known from DE 1 127 326. It is also known from DE 1 425 437 to separate the unreacted carboxylic acid from the carboxylic acid ester in the carboxylic acid ester solution and to recover the carboxylic acid from the solution by stripping. Thus it is known to recover the carboxylic acid by stripping off the carboxylic acid ester from the carboxylic acid ester solution together with the unreacted alkyl halide in a first step and to separate from the resulting vapour of the alkyl halide in a further step the unaltered alkyl halide. In fact, we pointed out that the majority of us in an active practice of criminal law do not accept the notion that I am "duty-bound" to provide a special set of procedural safeguards to an accused if he chooses to take advantage of the presence of my presence to get an injection of penicillin, and I don't propose to change my practice on that score. Where I feel that the procedural safeguards provided by our established law for the conduct of a trial are inadequate for some of the special problems presented in the conduct of the trial of an accused person, I do not hesitate to supplement those procedures; there simply have not been sufficient need shown to warrant the modification of the established procedure. I would, therefore, decline to grant the writs sought in this proceeding. NOTES [1] "As to punishment, such a judge is a law unto himself, and this, as well when he pronounces sentence, as when he acquits a prisoner, or, when he gives his reasons therefor, as in settling all such questions. He is accountable to no one, for he is a law to himself. The dignity of a judge, as the pre-eminence of his office, is to reconcile differences [] to persuade parties to reconcile. It is not, then, until he has heard the arguments, that he can properly determine between them. Nor does the occasion serve, when it is an uncontested sentence of death or punishment, or even when he settles a cause. In such cases, he ought to have the power to rule immediately, and with regard to his power, he ought to be under no checks. He is to decide. He is the judge [] and the decision, perhaps, is to be upon the spot, without a second thought □ and he must, without any hesitation, do his duty." 2 Samuel 8:14-15. [2] It is the trier's duty to decide questions of fact which lie within the province of his fact-finding power and function, not only when the verdict is one of guilty or innocent on a count, but when it is the result of a special verdict by the jury. Tennant v. Peoria & Pekin Union Ry. Co., 321 U.S. 29, 64
