Today I am going to show you a cool hack with a wireless router. Actually it is the same as before but with an innovative twist. You can now monitor all the access points at your home without any cable. Before you start I want to clarify that the following steps have been tested on the Ubuntu 16.04 Ubuntu environment. If you are using a different operating system you may face some minor glitches while following the steps. Enable a Router as Access Point The command you need to use is sudo iwconfig wlan0 mode monitor. You should now see that all the access points in your home are automatically connected to your router. I am pretty sure that you will like this feature. This one command will be used in many other examples to come. Step 2 Advanced Configuration of a Router For the next step we will have to do a little bit more. If you are a networking expert and like to have a list of all the commands you can use, go to the help page of iwconfig. You can get to the help by pressing the I key. If you don't know the help page, you can find it by typing iwconfig in the terminal window. In this example we will monitor the SSID of a router and connect to it. To do so we need to add mode monitor to our iwconfig command. The next example is the one I needed to use to create this post. sudo iwconfig wlan0 mode monitor sudo iwconfig wlan0 essid your_router_name sudo iwconfig wlan0 channel auto For the next step we are going to add encryption to our wireless network. To do that, we will use the following command sudo iwconfig wlan0 key YOUR_ENCRYPTION_KEY Step 3 Change a router's IP address If you don't want to keep your new wireless network open, you can now change the router's IP address. We can do so by using our iwconfig command again. For each one of the following three sentences, I have to put the IP of my router with subnet mask. Example I use 192.168.12.1 and 172.16.0.0 for my subnet mask. If we are using this router for Internet connections and we want to be able to access our router's content in the Internet,
