I have created a small example to demonstrate my question. I have the following layout When you click the "add" button to add a new row, and thus another value to the table, the layout changes, as shown here What I want to happen is that the JList and JTable update their layout when values are added, so the JList remains static, and only updates the length of the names. A: As per the comments to your question, JList overrides the getCellRenderer() method in order to implement more flexibility with that component. This means that it completely ignores the content of the Component#getTableCellRendererComponent() method (known as the renderer) and instead makes up its own table cell based on the current state of the JList. This can be seen clearly if we looked at a custom implementation of the renderer method, say: @Override public Component getTableCellRendererComponent(JTable table, Object value, boolean isSelected, boolean hasFocus, int row, int column) { String label = (String) value; if (label.length()
