End of the preview @mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn I cant boot into any installation. The installation won't recognize any of the discs that I have. None of them even show up in the installation. Not sure what to do.

@rleopoldsen@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Oh ok, that helps. Thanks for the info. I was hoping that it was just a problem with the disc drive.

@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn I am going to go ahead and say that the error message that I am receiving means that it is not seeing the disk drive as an install disk. If you can, can you go to the bios. Then go to the boot from EFI setting that boots from the usb drive and select the CD drive. Let me know if the installer can see the cd.

@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Alright, I will do that.

@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Here is a screen shot of what I saw there.

@rleopoldsen@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Is the usb drive that you are trying to install it on a usb 3.0 port? @mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Correct, that is what it says in that screen shot. If it is, then a usb drive that has the same drive letter can be used for both usb 2.0 and 3.0. A disk drive connected to the motherboard on the same ribbon cable cannot be used at both 2.0 and 3.0. @mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn Is it a laptop? @rleopoldsen@mattmcirl2@NoahManor2@Elementalxmr@Aquainn It is a laptop with a DVD drive. The laptop is an Inspiron 15 7000 series. @rleopoldsen@mattmc

T-lymphocyte subsets in scalp hair follicles of two patients with Hodgkin's disease. T cells are known to play an important role in immune reactions to foreign antigens and in the development of autoimmune diseases. The presence of T cells in hair follicles is still poorly documented, even though the stem cells of the hair follicles are known to share many properties with the stem cells of other tissues. In the present study, we evaluated the presence of T-lymphocytes in the scalp hair follicles of two patients with Hodgkin's disease and of two age-matched controls by using a monoclonal antibody against T cells as well as two fluorescence-activated cell sorter (FACS) analyses. A significant number of T cells were found both in the bulge and in the isthmus areas of normal hair follicles. This was true in both control subjects and patients. The percentages of T cells were similar in the control and in the patient group. This supports the idea that the immune system may be involved not only in the incidence of cancer, but also in the steady state and in some autoimmune diseases.

protein that may be a satiety factor or an energy homeostasis factor. In vitro and in vivo studies have shown that leptin stimulates GH production, while leptin deficiency leads to growth failure and secondary hypothyroidism. Leptin signalling involves a multimeric complex of two receptors, termed leptin receptor (ObR) and soluble leptin receptor (sObR). The leptin receptor is a single-transmembrane protein characterized by a short (20 to 22 kDa) extracellular domain, a membrane spanning domain and a long (50 to 55 kDa) intracytoplasmic domain that activates two distinct pathways: the mit
