Library of Congress: David Kelly's letter to the BBC in 2003 [pdf] - mtgx ===== njharman I'd love to know what he actually was communicating in this letter. If it's the "I'm gonna prove you're all idiots, make memes," variety of lying, w/o... feeling anything like guilt, perhaps it's warranted. ~~~ AndrewDucker This quote from the article: "If he [Fox] had treated the case properly and given them the answers they were asking for he would not have been told to go and commit suicide," ~~~ njharman I'm not sure how to interpret that quote. It could mean he was asked to go commit suicide for purely personal reasons (to be removed/disappear so he can't provide evidence of a leak). It could mean he was asked to commit suicide so he wouldn't be able to provide evidence of a leak. But I guess asking for one and then committing suicide is generally interpreted as voluntary (?) so I'm just speculating. It's also not clear if he was told what he wrote was confidential/not for public release. Maybe that is what he means by "they would not have been told to go commit suicide". ~~~ nkurz It does sound to me like it could be taken that way. "If he had complied with their request to commit suicide, he would have provided the answers they were asking for."
