

Just when you thought that not much more could be done to photos, comes DateMeNow. It offers a multitude of customization options that will help you produce something unique out of your precious images. At its core, it focuses on advanced EXIF editing and adds date stamps, URLs, captions, and even background paintings to your pictures. In addition to that, it provides two filters for outputting your images, namely Lightbox and Slideshow. Then again, you could also use the presets to create your own private image collection, all within this app. One thing worth mentioning, though, is that the application comes with a 30-day trial, thus making it a convenient option to choose.

DateMeNow Functions: • ISO & EXIF data editing • Can add date stamps, captions, and colors to images • Software also includes two different output functions • Free to use for a period of 30 days DateMeNow Requirements: • OS: Windows 7, Vista, XP • Processor: 300 MHz RAM Size: 12.7 MB How to download DateMeNow:Q: AngularJS: $http service ignores order of controllers specified in route I have an AngularJS application with nested levels of controller. A route serves a menu of "pages" (per the functionality of the first angular controller), with each page being an instance of a second-level controller that loads the content it needs to display. I'm looking for a way to get around the need to load the contents of the second controller in the route, because angular will load the controller functions before the user is actually on the page. The way I'm doing it, it works fine if the route and controllers are in the order I specified them in the example below, but it breaks if I reverse them. e.g. angular.module('app', ['ngRoute']).config(['$routeProvider', function($routeProvider) { $routeProvider.when('/profile', { templateUrl: 'views/profile.html', controller: 'ProfileController' }); }); angular.module('app').controller('ProfileController', ['$scope', '$http', function($scope, $http) { $http.get("")
