Mztin Al-Khafaji) -Q: Subclassing UIViewController in custom class My issue is as follows. I want to subclass UIViewController. My view controller doesn't have it's own xib file, so in the storyboard I have selected the object from the library. What I don't get is how to be able to instantiate the view controller without the xib file. If I do: let myController = MyViewController() I get the error: MVMViewController is not key value coding-compliant for the key view. If I do: let myController = ViewController() I get the error: Initialization of 'MyViewController' may be missing. The method init(from:) is not being called. Here is my code: class MyViewController: UIViewController { override init(from: AnyObject?) { super.init(from: from) } } My question is how to instantiate the view controller so that the init(from:) method is called and how to use it in a Storyboard without creating a xib file. I've never done this before and can't seem to find any examples in the web. Is it just that I don't understand how to use a UIViewController in a Storyboard and when to use
