Fortune 500 - 3000 Companies Serial Key Description: Included in the Fortune 500's description is a list of companies that received revenue from business of at least million during the previous year.The Fortune 500 is a listing of the largest United States companies according to a measure of their revenue, the Fortune 500. The list, which is published annually by Fortune magazine, is one of the most widely recognized rankings of the largest companies in the United States. Some companies on the Fortune 500 list are multibillion-dollar enterprises with many divisions. Conversely, some "small" companies have very large business portfolios that are not on the list.

Companies are eligible for inclusion on the list if they generated at least million in revenue during the year of the assessment. The Fortune 500 includes business enterprises of all types: for-profit, non-profit, government, and others. Entities may not be listed if their primary activity is real estate, commodity trading, private equity, litigation, law, or various other forms of personal service. Description: The Fortune 500 List was first published in 1955. The first ranking, based on the million in revenues of the 500 companies, was published in 1955. The size of the list increased from 50 to 500 companies in 1962, 1,000 in 1968 and to 2,000 in 1971. The data for the 1982 and 1983 Fortune 500 was collected using the 1977 Fortune 500 list (excluding companies added to that list during 1978). In 1984, when the company list was increased to 3,000, the inclusion of new companies was based on the 1981 Fortune 500 list. Topping the 1982 Fortune 3,000, was a group of 52 non-U.S. companies. For the 1982 list, million in revenue was the threshold for inclusion. For the first time in the list's history, million in revenues was used in the 1986 Fortune 3,000. While the million threshold was used in the million range for the first time in 1986, the million revenue ranking threshold was increased to million in the 1994 list. This million threshold was again used for the 1995 and 1996 lists. The 1997 list again returned to a

The fortune 500 list goes back to 1955 and is a list of the world's largest corporations by total revenue. The list was started by the American economist and writer Louis Brandeis. The F-list was started by Fortune magazine in 1956. In 1980 Fortune decided to add the C-list, because it was important to see the behind-the-scenes performance of companies that were not public and thus did not make it onto the F-list. The 'Fortune 500' list works on the concept that the definition of the term 'Fortune 500' is 'The top 500 companies of the United States according to annual revenue'. This means that the revenue of a company is critical, not it's profits, nor its market capitalization. This was inspired by Louis Brandeis who was a famous antitrust lawyer. The figure of $500 billion was chosen because at the time it was a huge number, it would be the total United States revenues. The following criteria are used: company financial information, compared to those of the other 500 companies in the world; the company's growth over the past decade; the company's volatility, meaning how much the company's annual revenues fluctuate over the decade; market dominance: how much revenue the company reaps, compared to its competitors; and the industry size and value: how many companies are in the same industry, and how much those companies are worth. The following companies have been removed from the list: CDS&P Financial Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, CDI Corporation, CB&I Terminals Inc. and its wholly owned subsidiary, Carolina Freight Carriers. Please note that these companies were removed from the list because they have gone bankrupt. The following companies were added to the Fortune 500 on April 12, 2012: Legion Energy and its wholly owned subsidiary, Liberty Utilities, because they had $2 billion in revenue in 2011. *Revenue b7e8fdf5c8 Fortune 500 companies are those included in the Fortune 500, an index of the largest United States companies compiled and published by Fortune magazine. "Fortune 500" is often used to provide a summary of the largest companies in the United States economy. Other, more detailed lists of large companies can be found by region or business sector, including the Fortune 1000 (which focuses on companies in the United States and the Fortune 100 (which includes international companies). Other, more specialized indices exist for companies based in particular countries, including the Fortune Global 500, which focuses on the largest companies in the world based on revenues. In its original 1974 publication, the list of Fortune 500 companies by revenue ranked companies by sales, assigning a rank of 1 (the largest) to the top 500 companies; in the 1977 update, revenue was replaced by earnings, so that a company with a sales rank of 1 could still have an earnings rank of 500 or more; in 1982, Fortune announced that the years of revenue used for ranking purposes would no longer be updated, meaning the sales rankings of 1982 would reflect the year of the original list and the earnings rankings of 1982 would reflect the year of the 1977 update; in the 1989 update, the ranking was corrected so that the earnings rank reflected the year of the original list rather than the earnings rank of the 1977 update; in the 2000 update, the companies were ranked on the basis of their 1997 annual sales, so the earnings and revenue rankings are less meaningful for the top of the list, and the 2000 earnings are much lower than the 1977 earnings. Changes for 2001: The list was shortened, to include only the 500 largest United States companies. The top 500 was the 500 firms with the highest sales during 1997. Some companies had joined and were dropped from the top 500 in 1997, and were brought back in 2001. Some companies expanded their businesses in 1997, and were dropped from the top 500 in 1997, and were brought back in 2001. The 2000 earnings are revised. Changes for 2002: The list was expanded to include the top 15 companies in the world, according to revenues and profits. Companies in the top 5 have their profits divided by the rank (so the largest company would have a profit percentage of 5) Companies in the top 5 were ranked based on 2002's consolidated revenues, just like 2000's
