Tomsoftsimppe/alpine-pxeh660-pxeh650-imprint-audyssey-multeq-v229.The role of benzodiazepines and anti-anxiety drugs in the relief of stress, pain, and anxiety associated with abortion. Benzodiazepines and anti-anxiety agents have been demonstrated to decrease the experience of pain and anxiety in abortion patients, and also to reduce the incidence of postabortal depression. However, evidence of a role for benzodiazepines in preventing postabortal depression is equivocal. A double blind placebo controlled study of the parenteral anti-anxiety drug, nordazepam, which had been found to be effective in decreasing anxiety and pain in postabortal patients, was carried out over a seven month period to determine if it would prevent postabortal depression and to determine if it would decrease the incidence of abortion-related complications. The addition of nordazepam to the treatment regimen did not decrease the incidence of abortion-related complications. Prevalence of postabortal depression was found to be similar in both placebo and nordazepam treated subjects (7% and 7.2%). The effectiveness of the drug in decreasing pain and anxiety associated with abortion, as well as its safety in preventing abortion-related complications indicate that it may be considered
