For most of us, the lion's share of photography is done with a point-and-shoot camera. The camera's built-in features and ability to take many pictures automatically are nice. However, digital photography offers such a variety of choices that a trained eye can make better pictures. So knowing the many ways you can customize your images is necessary for you to improve the odds of creating pictures you're proud of. With the toolkit selected, you can change the toolkit to use any of the tools available in the Edit toolkit. In addition, you can configure a keyboard shortcut for the most-used tools: The Move, Rotate, and Scale tools can be customized in the Control Panel. Select the Tool Palette button, and choose Edit⇒Preferences⇒Keys⇒Move Tool. You can then select a key that's already available on the keyboard. See "Creating keyboard shortcuts" for more details. Creating keyboard shortcuts When using a mouse, keyboard shortcuts offer a convenient way to move quickly. To use keyboard shortcuts, open the Control Panel and select the shortcut icon that appears at the bottom of the Edit menu (see Figure 11-4) to see a list of the shortcuts available. Figure 11-4: To take advantage of keyboard shortcuts, open the Control

Charles Blackwood Charles Lobb Blackwood (2 September 1831 – 13 June 1918) was an English gold prospector, engineer and photographer. He prospected extensively in the Sacramento and El Dorado counties of northern California. During the California Gold Rush he was elected President of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, and was a prominent member of the Pony Express and the Comstock Lode Joint Stock Mining Company. Early life Blackwood was born on 2 September 1831 in Scarborough. His father was a storekeeper of Ordish and Blackwood's Warehouse and Dry Dock. Charles was the second of seven children; his older sister Annie married gold miner and photographer Edward S. Curtis. Gold prospecting career From 1851–1852, Blackwood was employed as a ferry clerk, making the trip several times a day from the Sacramento to Yuba City at a salary of $12 per month. This paid well, and Blackwood used the trip as an opportunity to prospect for gold. On his earliest trip in 1851, Blackwood was paid $12 for bringing back two pans of gold. In 1851,

Blackwood wrote a letter to his brother-in-law, who was then a member of the Pony Express, appealing for assistance with his prospecting. The letter won him several weeks of the Pony Express Company's services for a salary of $30 per week. Blackwood was able to send the letter before the Pony Express left the San Francisco ferry, and they began traveling together. In July 1852, Blackwood traveled across the Mojave Desert on the way to the California gold fields, but the journey was difficult and did not result in any gold. In 1854, Blackwood was hired as a stagecoach driver by lawyer, explorer and surveyor Edward Baker on the way to pioneer the new Gold Rush settlement of Washoe City, Nevada. During the journey, Blackwood used an excerpt from Robert Browning's poem "Epistle to Lucifer", "Ephemera", for a tunnel through a snowstorm on the way back to Sacramento. In October 1854, he married Maria Sutter in Sacramento. In July 1855, Blackwood was hired as a watchman at William Mitchell's California Bank. The watchman was in charge of the bank vault, and he kept the employees out of the vault at night. At the bank, Blackwood met with Samuel Brannan, founder and president of the
