The result is a heightened, immersive soccer experience, with player movements and tackle animations feeling more connected to the ball, with every head movement and every tackle affecting the game in a never-before-seen way. Players who have played FIFA 17 will benefit from deeper player controls and a more accurate and natural control scheme. Focused on the development of the overall FIFA experience, the development team has delivered a number of improvements, including:

New Control Scheme The introduction of the new control scheme feels more natural and responsive. Smaller distances between the analog stick and the face buttons make moving and controlling the game easier and more fluid. Players can now initiate moves and tackles with more speed and tactical precision. Passing and dribbling have also been overhauled and improved. As players pass the ball, the ball now visually moves in front of the player to show where it is headed. Simultaneously, the new control scheme makes the player feel more in control of the ball during aggressive attacks. The improved passing mechanics are also more realistic, more challenging to execute and more rewarding. Players can now perform more varied and intense dribbling moves with greater speed and intensity. Dribbling moves such as feints and fakes are now more realistic and responsive. Dribbling also now leads to realistic transitions and decisions when a player goes on the attack. For example, cutbacks will be more effective.

Smarter AI FIFA has always been a game of smart play. A shift of just a few yards can be the difference between a goal and a goal. In FIFA 22, the Intelligent Player Trajectory System (iPTS) makes it more intelligent, more interesting and more realistic. Players now read the game more intuitively, and they react more consistently to changing situations on the pitch. They are also less predictable and will be more defensive in the most intense phases of the game. The game's most experienced and talented players are more effective, harder to beat and drive the team forward by leading the attack on multiple fronts, as well as by combining beautifully with their teammates. The new iPTS also works in tandem with the more refined AI at defender level. They have a more intelligent set of strategies, tactics and defensive skills and they try to stop the opposition better. Improved Defense FIFA has always been about working together as a team, and in FIFA 22, defenders are now more
