inferior vena cava (IH-IVC) and are associated with the development of hepatosplenomegaly. However, these children usually have normal liver and spleen size, which may be misinterpreted as a normal clinical examination. Ultrasound imaging has been used to evaluate hepatic and splenic size, but the anatomic structures cannot be evaluated. The present study was performed to evaluate the effect of non-renal left-to-right shunts on the anatomy and the hemodynamics of the IVC. Computed tomography and magnetic resonance venography were used to evaluate 40 patients. Their ages ranged from 3 to 17 years, with a mean age of 10 years. The common venous d0c515b9f4
