Hitman 3.STAT6 and TRAF6 are targets of the human papillomavirus type 16 E6 oncoprotein. Human papillomaviruses (HPVs) are non-enveloped DNA viruses with a circular single-stranded genome that are the etiological agents of a variety of human cancers. The high-risk type of HPV, HPV-16, is strongly implicated in cervical cancer. The viral E6 oncoprotein is an integral part of the viral life cycle and it is highly expressed in cervical carcinoma cells. E6 binds to the p53 tumor suppressor protein, thus targeting p53 for degradation, and it also targets the host cell E3 ubiquitin ligase, human E6 associated protein (E6AP), for degradation.

The water infusion technique is an office-based and office-centered procedure with a high risk of uterine perforation and other complications. This study attempts to describe a bedside technique for hysteroscopic surgery. A prospective cohort study was performed on a convenience sample of healthy women presenting for routine, elective infertility evaluation and infertility treatment (n = 90). Women were attended by an infertility and obstetric nurse; the nurse prepped the patient and uterine cavity, utilizing a bedside laparoscopic technique, before a low-profile hysteroscope was inserted with a distal oxygen supply.
