“The game works seamlessly across platforms – one game and one vision,” said Jeff Ballard, Senior producer, Sports Interactive. “We’ve used the player data and motion captured gameplay from 22 real-life players for the first time ever in a FIFA title, and it’s opening up a brand new way of thinking about the game.”

Seamless gameplay from all platforms
Everyone can enjoy the benefits of the HyperMotion Technology by playing the game on any platform and across any device that supports Google Play.

According to FIFA Interactive Director Carsten Haab: “At a deeper level, what this means is a new platform that actually drives the way the game behaves. And really, that’s what makes it a new platform altogether. This is the first time that we were able to transform the way the game plays.” The camera work used in the motion capture data is able to provide a fully immersive view of the game. “For us, it was important to get a feeling of how immersive the cameras would be and how they would feel in the player’s hands,” said Ballard. “What you’re seeing on screen is what the player would see out there in the world.” Motion capture data from 22 real-life players, from a fully loaded game in motion on a high-end gaming system, from a mobile phone and from an Xbox One. For the first time, the team was able to capture and analyze every aspect of movement on the pitch. “The data we collected was the most detailed we’d seen so far. Every player was tracked in motion capture suits,” said Haab. “And what you see in play, you would see in the data in-game.” Adidas FIFA Elite Collection cleats Adidas has produced a range of Elite Cleats for players to play the game on. The new FIFA Elite Collection, designed to enhance player skill, includes a variety of cleats for different types of play. “We wanted to get as close to what players experience with the real thing,” said Kevin Miehl, Head of Global Brands. “Because when you play the game, you play on a level that’s very technical and deep. And we’re bringing that to the platforms.”
