fell over from my chair in my living room today. It is raining in the afternoon here so the cherry blossoms are still out in the yard and I love to sit and watch the seagulls and small sparrows fly. I also read that the chickens are being rescued from Sunnydale too. From being abused, poorly fed, or left without heat or shelter, Sunnydale's chickens will now have a happy life on a farm in Pennsylvania. I only have my very own flock of chickens, who I adore, so I'm happy that other chickens will now be well fed. We will have a viewing of the final Harry Potter film on Sunday. I am hoping that I can fit that in before the end of the month. About Me Hi, my name is Kim Van Valkenburg and I've been blogging for over 10 years and mother to one child, Jack, who recently turned six! I blog on a variety of topics, my favorite being my kids and parenting adventures. I hope you will follow along on my family's adventures.

Barrier activity of sol-gel and HPMC based mucoadhesive drug release dressings and cements: A review. Mucoadhesive bandages and cements are frequently used to secure dressings to the skin. The disadvantages of applying such dressings include the painful removal of the bandages and the cytotoxic effects of the incorporated material. Development of barrier formulations having superior properties to existing dressings and cements is required. This review provides an overview of those areas of research where barrier activity of mucoadhesive drug release dressings and c

The process of DNA fingerprinting gives a snapshot of the population which is static and provides only a minimal insight into population dynamics. More recently, a number of molecular epidemiological techniques have been developed, based on the use of random chromosomal mutations such as restriction fragment length polymorphisms (RFLPs) and variable number of tandem repeats (VNTRs). These techniques allow the monitoring of the dynamic aspects of a population such as the possible spread of epidemic strains. Restriction fragment length polymorphisms and VNTRs are mutation-specific, whereas the RFLP fingerprinting technique is more general, i.e
