morphological, immunohistochemical and autoradiographic properties of morphometric indexes. These parameters are represented by the number, aspect and diameter of astrocytes, the density of glial fibrillary acidic protein (GFAP) immunoreactive cells, the thickness of the cortical layers and the number of astrocytes demonstrated by silver grains incorporated in the nucleus. A remarkable finding is the increase of the concentration of immunoreactive GFAP in the white matter and the fissure of the cerebral cortex, together with a significant increase in the number of immunoreactive astrocytes. The demonstration of GFAP by autoradiography confirms the increase in the concentration of this intermediate filament protein and suggests the possibility of an intense synthesis of GFAP. The morphometric and
