Elwave 9.2g including crackQ: Z3 Library not the same as from documentation I have the following problem in a C++ program that uses the Z3 library: The documentation of Z3 says there is a parameter called is_false that is true if the solver tries to find the falseness of the given formula. The following works as expected: a = tzn_bool(0, i); b = tzn_bool(1, i); c = tzn_bool(0, i); d = tzn_bool(1, i); e = tzn_bool(true, i); bool res = c->evaluate(a, b, c, d, e); But if I try this: tQuery q(solver, i); a = tzn_bool(0, i); b = tzn_bool(1, i); c = tzn_bool(0, i); d = tzn_bool(1, i); e = tzn_bool(true, i); res = q->contains_model(a, b, c, d, e); The result is false. But if I use a variable of type tQuery instead, then Z3 returns true. Please note that I do not want to use QF_AU for this purpose. So I think that the documentation can be incorrect. Does anybody know how to get this parameter to work? A: You are misunderstanding the distinction between a solver and a query. A solver can be used to generate a model, and you can query it to figure out if a given bit-vector is inconsistent. A solver cannot be used to query itself, as would be needed here. You should use
