Turn any paper into a logarithmic diagram for data presentation. MRN (Multiplier [for] Record) is a logarithmic converter that works in the same way as a calculator does. With it, you can multiply or divide values of non-logarithmic values that include numbers and fractions, as well as arguments, and display the result in the form of a logarithmic line. MRN is a handy tool that can be used to reveal all the secrets behind a seemingly simple number. In fact, it will do all of the hard work for you. The results of the calculations are shown as a logarithmic line, and the calculation can be multiplied or divided. The line is also useful for representing logs and exponents. How to use Enter the first value in the first box, then move the decimal point to the left until it disappears from the box. After that, press the "Convert" button. In the next box, type the second value. Then, just press the "Convert" button to multiply or divide the two values. And that's not all. You can enter fractions and negative values, and it will still work. The results can be displayed as a logarithmic line or an exponential line. MRN Specifications Usage of MRN MRN is a logarithmic converter, which is basically a calculator of logarithmic values. You can multiply or divide the resulting values with ease. Log Paper Download Link : a story posted by Joe Wright of the Daily Mail, the English soccer club Leeds United is rumored to be looking to make a swoop for former Chelsea striker, Andriy Shevchenko, who is currently on loan at Spanish club Valencia. The Ukrainian international is seeking to return to the Premier League, and is apparently available for transfer in mid to late January. No doubt the 33-year-old would be a welcomed acquisition for Leeds if he does decide to move on to the O'Halloran Stand. Shevchenko has also started to garner interest from Bundesliga club, Wolfsburg, the club he played for before he came to England. It was rumored that there was a chance the Liverpool manager would have the media focus on him but it went away very quickly, leaving him to concentrate on what was an excellent performance against Northampton Town. Reports were on the gridiron earlier this week that Brendan Rodgers wanted to sign the Australian centre back, a player Rodgers managed for club and country, but Liverpool went nowhere.
