The identification of a novel isoform of a cell cycle regulator, PC3. P21Cip1/Waf1 and p27Kip1/Ckip1 are involved in the regulation of cell cycle progression. Recent studies have revealed that some p21 and p27 isoforms expressed in normal tissues may be oncogenic, leading to poor prognosis in several human cancers. We screened candidate cDNA clones for new members of the p21 and p27 families from a normal human prostate cDNA library. A new member of the p21 family, PC3, was identified, and its tissue distribution, genomic organization, and cell cycle regulation were analyzed. The isolation of the functional domains of PC3 will pave the way to study its molecular function. The expression of PC3 was upregulated by tumor necrosis factor-alpha in the human prostate cancer cell line, PC-3. In contrast, treatment with lipopolysaccharides or cAMP reduced the expression of PC3. We isolated a full-length complementary DNA (cDNA) encoding PC3. The cDNA encodes a 482 amino acid protein that contains a cyclin-dependent kinase binding domain, but does not have a CDK-activating domain, resulting in inactivation of CDKs. PC3 differs from the previously reported p21 family members in its genomic organization. A 3.4-kb mRNA containing the structural gene was identified, and its 5'-flanking region lacked a TATA box. There was no similar expression of PC3 isoforms in tissues examined in this study. PC3 showed a bimodal expression pattern in fetal and adult tissues, with the highest expression in the fetal colon, liver, and thymus, and in the neonatal liver. However, expression was restricted to the prostate and mammary glands of the adult. These observations suggest that PC3 could play an important role in cell cycle regulation as an independent regulator of cell cycle progression, especially in the prostate gland. Q: Generating a random year and time with defined time interval I'm trying to make a function which generates a random year and a random time within a given range.
