Sex attitudes and sexual behavior among young adults in Pittsburgh: implications for sexual-health promotion. The relationship of sexual attitudes and behaviors to disease risk has been documented, yet few studies have considered the importance of geographic locale for health-related issues. This article presents the results of a sexual attitudes and behaviors survey of 945 urban Pittsburgh residents aged 18 to 22 years, the youngest age group for which an established reproductive health indicator has been documented. The majority of the sample (72.5%) reported having had sexual intercourse. Reported contraceptive use was highest among those who had never had intercourse and was lowest among sexually experienced women. The most significant correlates of having sexual intercourse were sexual attitudes (coital satisfaction and desirability) and number of sexual partners. The strongest predictors of contraceptive use were education and age. The most significant predictors of coital frequency included attitudes, age, and the use of alcohol, cigarettes, and marijuana. In general, significant effects of region on reported sexual attitudes and behavior emerged only in the context of perceived high risk.

Q: Can't delete index when creating a new migration? I have a index on a model that I want to delete in a migration, but it's not allowing me to. This is the migration: `class DeleteCategoriesIndex "categories_index_name" end end` I get this error: `PG::UndefinedTable: ERROR: relation "categories_index_name" does not exist` I have another index called `categories_index`, but I want to clear the `categories_index` one.

A: This is because the SQL to run the migration has an index which matches the schema you're trying to delete, not the schema you want to add the index to. If you want to create a new index on categories you should run: `create index categories_index_name on categories(name)` If you want to remove the current index on categories: `remove_index :categories, :name => "categories_index_name"` You can't have two indexes with the same name.
