As the only character in the movie who isn't affiliated with a government agency, Liam Neeson's Bryan Mills offers a .The major goal of this research proposal is to develop magnetic resonance imaging techniques that enable the non-invasive characterization of the brain's metabolic activity for spatial and temporal assessment of brain function. The specific aims of this project are to develop novel magnetization transfer contrast (MTC) imaging methods for performing high-resolution mapping of neural activation in the brain. Using these novel and existing MTC methods, we will examine the hemodynamic responses to visual stimulation with the goal of understanding how the visual cortex processes complex visual stimuli. This work has important relevance to the broad goals of understanding the neural systems subserving higher-order visual functions and could potentially facilitate recovery from brain injuries. The MRI methods to be developed also have important potential applications in neuroimaging. MTC imaging has the unique ability to image neural activation with a resolution of a few millimeters, thereby providing a new approach for assessing functional changes in activated brain areas in multiple brain regions simultaneously. [unreadable] [unreadable] [unreadable]Valentine's Day is right around the corner, which means it's time to find the perfect partner for your Valentine. Someone who's not into Tinder, or your emotionally unavailable uncle, but someone who's actually smitten with you. Someone who actually likes you. Someone who, in a world of swiping and selfies, has actually taken the time to read your profile. But if you're anything like me, you don't have that kind of luck. So I've devised a foolproof method for finding your soulmate- the Tinder for the 21st century. I've also created a follow-up post that will provide you with the tools to maintain a relationship with your soulmate. Note: You will not actually get a soulmate through this process. No, that would be unrealistic. The reason why I'm making this post is that I want to help other people find that one person they want to spend the rest of their lives with. While I'm not interested in marriage, I want to create the right circumstances for dating. My Method for Finding Your Soulmate Step 1: Search for Your Soulmate The first step towards meeting a soulmate is to establish who you are looking for. For a while there was no app out there that would
