Thin Film Transistor (TFT) devices are commonly used in modern electronics. For example, TFT devices can be utilized as switching devices in pixels of an array of pixels in a display. TFT devices can also be utilized as switching devices in data bus for keyboards, data entry pads for hand held electronic devices, and the like. TFT devices can be formed from amorphous or polycrystalline silicon, or from low or high-temperature polysilicon. Although TFT devices formed of amorphous silicon or high-temperature polysilicon can be used for monolithic applications, these types of TFT devices typically have low electron mobility, which is a significant drawback for use in large area devices. TFT devices formed of low-temperature polysilicon have higher electron mobility than their counterparts formed of amorphous or high-temperature polysilicon, thus making them preferable for use in large area devices. However, TFT devices fabricated from low-temperature polysilicon are not suitable for high-performance electronics because of variations in electrical characteristics such as the threshold voltage V_{th} of the TFT devices, which are caused by poly-Si grain boundaries. Accordingly, there is a need for a TFT device that includes a low-temperature polysilicon layer that does not have grain boundary related issues.Age-dependent paraptosis in mouse cells. Paraptosis, or programmed cell death induced by excessive endoplasmic reticulum (ER) stress and not involving typical apoptotic features, plays an important role in the pathology of various diseases. Little is known about this type of cell death in mammals, especially in aging. To address this question, the characteristics of the cytopathology of mouse thymocytes and hepatocytes during aging were investigated. In aged thymocytes, the ER localized in the periphery of the nucleus, rather than in the cytoplasm, and enlarged cisternae of the ER were observed by transmission electron microscopy. In aged hepatocytes, ER swelling occurred and Golgi apparatus were dissociated from the perinuclear space. The nucleus was apparently fragmented in aged hepatocytes. These results indicate that paraptosis may be important in cellular aging.Q: Linux: how to encrypt hard disk using dd and file system but avoid /boot?
