"Dans son esprit, chacun d'entre nous ne peut que lui rendre de grands services." We were brought up to believe that man was inherently good. While I try to maintain a positive outlook in life, I'm more of a skeptical optimist. I never thought that before, but I've come to the conclusion that there is a lot of truth to the motto, "Optimism is the faith that leads to achievement." I'm tempted to go to a psychologist and get some Ritalin, but I feel like I'd prefer to see how far one can go on optimism alone. My focus has always been on the day-to-day process of living, not in the pursuit of end goals. I don't know if this makes me more realistic or lacks the true optimism that it speaks of in theory. Hey, be positive! Here's some encouragement: Quote Optimism is the attitude that things will work out OK, even though we can't be certain that they will. We are obligated to act in accordance with our moral principles, but we are not responsible for their correctness. We are moral agents, and responsible for doing good and avoiding evil, even though we cannot be certain that what we do will actually do either of these things. Unlike scientific determinism, which is untenable, moral determinism is a much more intuitive and reasonable claim. The problem is that while it may be true, it is also a paralyzing claim, since no one can morally know whether a given course of action will lead to a good outcome. We are able to know that there are moral principles that tell us we ought to do certain things, but we are not able to know whether we will do the right thing in any given situation. Despite the fact that we are morally responsible for what we do, we cannot blame ourselves if we acted rightly but things don't go as planned. It is entirely possible for us to do something wrong and it is quite possible that the universe is morally indifferent towards our actions. We are obligated to act in accordance with our moral principles, but we are not responsible for their correctness. We are moral agents, and responsible for doing good and avoiding evil, even though we cannot be certain that what we do will actually do either of these things. This resonates with my own spiritual beliefs. Things in this world that are not of
