Two factions of the American Left have long sought to dominate American culture and politics. One faction believes America is a sinful country and traditional American values such as patriotism, religion, capitalism and the family are wrong and to be renounced. This sect believes that traditional America is an obscenity which we should shun and discard as quickly as possible. They believe that America will only be able to advance if we renounce its past and embrace the values of an international communist utopia. The other faction believes America is the most virtuous and noble nation in the world. They believe that America is a shining city on a hill which the rest of the world should emulate and love. Their argument is simple: we are no longer a nation but a vast hive of self-centered individuals, corrupted by capitalism, racism, and sexism. In this view, American culture is fundamentally good and virtuous, and to undermine this virtue is to condemn ourselves to an impotent and inferior existence. And what is required to restore the natural goodness of this culture is not an international campaign of Marxist terror and subversion but a return to traditional values. Why did this narrative last in the Left's ranks? Because Leftists' search for alternatives to American patriotism and American exceptionalism is not simply a reaction to the policies and popular culture of the past few decades. As much as the Left wants to believe that all western culture is corrupt and wicked, they actually see American values as the exact opposite of their own. I find it ironic that Leftists often accuse right-wing conservatives of wanting to return America to a past they despise. I see it as a tacit admission that Leftists do not truly believe the American past was as corrupt and rotten as they claim. In the end, the Left will not truly reject America's values and culture until they see American exceptionalism as it is, 648931e174 two aspects of an FPS that I'm most excited about," project creator Tinu Antal explains. "Rendering is less about creating amazing visuals and more about creating something that looks good and feels right. Something that looks realistic, and has a good sense of life in it, and it looks really good." However, in terms of polishing the game up for launch, he thinks that more than anything else, it's going to be how easy to play it is, that people find "pretty seamless." In that sense, they've done a great job of making the game look as good as it does feel—with the natural speed, precise feedback and ball physics being among the game's most stunning elements. Enjoying TennisMatch in motion is an absolute treat. The smooth tracking and jittery ball movement, along with the knock-back effects, all combined to create the in-tact, living and realistic feeling of a tennis game. The disc also contains a 30 second demo that lets you see the game in action. Overall, it's a great-looking game with a unique, fun experience that we're really looking forward to seeing on the HTC Vive. The current work-in-progress version doesn't differ too much from what's in the developer video below—however, there are dozens of updates that Tinu has been working on since then, so it's likely that there will be updates over time, as well as
