On account of their fairly specific biological features, cancer cells are often characterized by defects in specific pathways, including hematopoietic differentiation and DNA repair, and thus by increased sensitivity to agents that specifically and directly impair these pathways. Identification of specific molecules on the surface of cancer cells and pro-drugs that are activated only in the presence of these molecules make the cancer-associated genes good targets for gene therapy of cancer. An additional advantage of targeting cancer cells via genes is that the reporter genes for classical gene therapy can be delivered in this fashion. Therefore, by this approach it may become possible not only to detect the presence of cancer cells in a given tumor in a noninvasive fashion, but also to specifically treat it. The present article discusses advantages and disadvantages of various approaches in gene therapy of cancer. religion that was severely repressed by the Arab World in the 60s and 70s. This is something that the US and its allies have never talked about in the past and this is something that we need to all focus on.
