Aerobic training and impaired thyroid function: a sex-specific study of 140 patients. In the authors' earlier study of 44 subjects, they found that the serum concentration of free triiodothyronine (fT3) was significantly correlated with the duration of a single bout of aerobic exercise. The present study was designed to determine whether this relationship existed in a larger sample of patients. The authors evaluated the serum levels of thyrotropin, total T4 (T4), total T3 (T3), fT3, and free T4 (fT4) before and for up to three weeks after a single bout of aerobic exercise in 140 patients on various diets (40 men, 100 women
