Femtosecond Yb:KGW passively mode-locked fiber laser at 1.0 μm . Based on the low-conversion efficiency spectral broadening of a high-gain erbium-doped fiber amplifier, we demonstrate continuous-wave (CW) pulse generation from a femtosecond Yb:KGW passively mode-locked fiber laser at 1.0 μm . Distinct double-peak spectral distribution is exhibited in both the ASE and laser pulses, which are mainly attributed to the emission of two-photon absorption bands of SiO₂ and tellurite in the gain fiber and the substrate of the gain fiber, respectively. A maximum average output power of 6.6 W is obtained with a slope efficiency of 35.5%. The corresponding pulse repetition frequency (PRF) can reach 40 kHz with more than 99.98% pulse-to-pulse stability.

the Wutemberg code. The Wutemberg code was a beast to produce and it was more about the flavor of the day than the actual preservation of the artist. The slides would often change when a new artist would start production. Production would not always happen on the same day as the meeting. In fact, at the time of the meeting I was in California on business but when I got back a crew of my friends and I were painting the concept art and the Wutemberg code on the set that afternoon. The set was designed by Rick Farmer and built by art director Ralph Hembrey and his team. The graphics department that day were the incredible Doug Herb and Dan Pharr, two artists that I am very thankful for. The aim of the Wutemberg code was to communicate back to the studio what they needed for the day. Although they had a door code, it was normally on a speaker phone, so there wasn't much communication in those times. The Wutemberg code consisted of a string of numbers that were used to instruct the crew. Every team had their own personal code. The Wutemberg code Here is a great video of the process. It takes place on the set, so beware of slow loading times At one point in time there was an app on your phone that allowed you to send the Wutemberg code to a page. For example, if a set had a code of 1234567890, you'd open the app, type the code in and press send, and it would tell you that the set code was 1234567890. Another app which I think is just gone (or maybe it's not) had a "HOLIDAY" button that would send you the holidays greeting in 1080p HD. I can't find a video that shows the HOLIDAY button, but hopefully someone has a link to one! The Wutemberg Code Holidays (37 Creative uses of the Wutemberg code)

The Wutemberg code was used on all the sets and we had many variations of it. Even on a single show, when you changed the set, you'd use a different code. Next time: Stay tuned for the next episode where I discuss my experiences at "The Birth of the Guardians" and "
