each week. Since the All-Stars Draft during the World Cup, we've seen fan favorites such as Miroslav Klose, Luka Modric and Wayne Rooney getting added to the game. This week's update will also introduce the 2014 FIFA World Cup Brazil Best XI line-up, with the release of our All-Stars Draft in-game. The biggest update we've seen since launch will hit over the next two weeks, but before we get into details on the features, here's a sneak peek at some of the many improvements coming to FIFA 22.

HyperMotion Technology

For this year's update, we have experimented extensively with new motion capture technology called "HyperMotion Technology" to make sure we best capture the real-life movement of each player. While there are many ways to capture a player's movement, this approach provided the most accurate and authentic results of any previous gameplay. We've used the same technology on-pitch to capture high-intensity, high-impact matches from real players. All 22 players participated, and they were all wearing suits that precisely monitored body movements. To capture every movement of the players, we equipped the suits with infrared cameras and motion-tracking equipment. Players looked pretty silly in their motion capture suits, which is why you'll see them in the video embedded above. This technology allows us to introduce new features like "HyperMotion Technology" so players feel more connected to the game, and player behaviors more authentic as the players move more naturally while still making them feel the same.
