Roblox is a virtual world developed by Roblox Corporation and a website that allows users to create and play games made for Roblox online. Roblox has games that range from business simulation, role playing, and puzzle games. Roblox games are also programmed in Lua, a form of scripting. The platform is free to play with optional in-game purchases. With the platform's user base growing rapidly, Roblox Corporation expanded in 2010. The company's growth was initially driven by an IPO in 2015. In 2016, Roblox introduced gameplay mechanics to its platform for Roblox, virtual currency earned through gameplay. It was also announced in 2017 that Roblox would be adding cross-platform play. In 2016, Roblox was the third-most visited website in North America and the seventh-most visited website in the world. By August 2018, it was reported that Roblox had more than 100 million users, and in August 2019, the platform had 178 million monthly active users. In the weeks leading up to the company's planned IPO, its headcount reached more than 10,000 employees. [1] Gameplay on Roblox is free, with virtual items or currency purchasable to accelerate gameplay and customise one's in-game avatar. Roblox allows users to engage in role-playing, building, third-person shooter, strategy, and sports games. The platform has 28 million active gamers in more than 50,000 games. In 2019, Roblox announced plans to create games for the Apple iPhone and iPad. For the 2020–2021 academic year, Roblox provided $500,000 each to 14 university teams to develop game projects. In October 2019, Roblox was working with major game companies Ubisoft, EA and Sony to bring their games to Roblox. In 2018, Roblox spent $1.5 million on marketing. Roblox Marketing Manager Hannah McAteer said they often spend $200,000 to create a game trailer; $50,000 to release it on different platforms; $70,000 to advertise on Facebook; $75,000 to create a "Monday mechanic"; $150,000 to cover paying in-game creators, and $100,000 to advertise on Reddit and YouTube. [2] In August 2019, Roblox reportedly spent $45 million on advertisements in Q2 2019. In March 2019, Roblox expanded its free game offerings in Canada and Mexico. In February
